Well, that's done. If you're a NASCAR fan that means you'll miss out on a little bit of competition. If you're a NASCAR fan that means you'll get some clarity about how things are going to be organized. If you're a NASCAR fan that means that you're probably going to be a little bit more entertained as well. Back in February when a new system was announced. I described a three phase qualifying format that had two phases of 30 minutes each followed by a 20 minute final qualifying session. The whole process was supposed to produce a tense, end of the night filled with the type of drama that fans had been missing for years. Phase 1 was expected to produce several big wrecks while the drivers duked it out for better position. But you would have to say that last year's race didn't have a lot of major wrecks. Of course that may be because of the qualifying format. Instead of the 30 minute session that produced multiple, back-and-forth battles for position we got a single 20 minute competition. Additionally, over the course of the 20 minute run, edd6d56e20
