In order to transmit information of the high-layer control channel, a total of eight on-off times (obtained by dividing the entire length of the high-layer control channel by 8) in the packet drop call are required. Each on-off time includes a control channel sub-frame #1 where field size of the high-layer control channel is 0.5 ms, a control channel sub-frame #2 where field size of the high-layer control channel is 1.25 ms, and so on. In a long term evolution (LTE) Radio Access Network (RAN) packet drop call, the contents are as follows: a length of a control channel sub-frame is 0.5 ms, and an on-off time is 2 ms. At present, in the LTE RAN packet drop call, a method of determining the on-off times of the high-layer control channel only considers the total length of the high-layer control channel and the on-off times of the control channel sub-frame 1, 2 and so on, in the packet drop call. We conducted a pilot study to find a relationship between the evoked response potentials (ERPs) and visual illusions in psychotic patients. In schizophrenia, visual illusions are known to be associated with poor functioning, therefore, it is significant that we study the theory that the focus of attention is impaired in this disorder. We recorded the average visual evoked potentials of the P(100), N(140) and P(200) waves of the occipital cortex in 12 healthy subjects and 12 schizophrenic patients. Twelve minutes into the presenting a series of patterns, consisting of grey squares, in a classical visual masking paradigm, subjects reported whether the presentations of visual stimuli appeared in black or white. For both healthy and schizophrenic subjects the average visual ERPs of P(100) and N(140) waves were analyzed. For P(100) waves, the data was normal in healthy subjects (normalized peak amplitude: P(100): 0.73 ± 0.1 ; N(140): 1.00 ± 0.1) and schizophrenic patients on low symptom severity score (Bristol scale score: 5.25
