Photograph: Anadolu Agency/Getty Images Hugh Young, the City of London's head of economy, warns that the decision to knock down Victorian buildings to build flats - typically leading to more expensive homes - "risks a major loss to our urban environment and economic resilience". It also risks "harming the reputation of London, particularly as a liveable and affordable city". "More than twice as many people who moved from one London neighbourhood to another were drawn to the most desirable areas," he writes. "Yet they moved from homes in areas with many of the problems caused by the local government's urban renewal programmes to areas that lacked their problems." Dublin According to the former planning minister, Donal Donnelly, the Dublin system can work but requires substantial levels of political will. "Dublin, like every other city in the world, has to change to cope with new global pressures and ever increasing population," he writes. "The new urban policy will help planners, policy makers and the general public, to reduce loss and avoid'sprawl' without compromising on quality of life." He notes that a recent study found that the system has reduced urban congestion, reduced the Application of fumigation techniques for the control of onion thrips in Spain. The onion thrips, Thrips tabaci Lindeman (Thysanoptera: Thripidae), is a major pest in the processing of fresh onions and table onions throughout Europe. Three techniques were compared for their effectiveness in controlling this insect: sulfur fumigation (96 h at a 2-3 kg sulfur/m³ atmosphere of 3.4 kg sulfur/m³ CO₂ and 7.4 kg sulfur/m³ oxygen), organic fumigation (96 h with eucalyptus oil at 0.03 kg/m³ and 0.06 kg/m³ on infested onions) and organophosphorus fumigation (24 h at a 5 kg phosphine/m³ atmosphere). Fumigation treatments of the three techniques caused a high mortality of onion thrips adults and larvae. Complete mortality was recorded in all fumigation treatments, although some adult thrips were found after 5 d, probably as a result of survival on the onion

Five patients who had developed hypophosphatemia during treatment with aluminium hydroxide were re-evaluated when aluminium hydroxide had been discontinued. All had symptoms of neuromuscular hypophosphatemia (i.e., proximal weakness, paresthesia or polyuria) at the time of the assessment and there was no obvious precipitating factor. One patient also had low bone mineral density. Fractional phosphate reabsorption from the distal nephron in these patients was normal (range, 0.15-0.22) and the renal handling of phosphate was impaired (increased distal tubular phosphate reabsorption and decreased fractional phosphate excretion), but could be explained by phosphate enrichment of the tubular fluid and decreased phosphate delivery in response to phosphate supplementation. A dose-dependent increase in proximal tubular phosphate reabsorption with multiple phosphate supplements was seen with the single-stage titration procedure. One patient had an apparent association between neuromuscular symptoms of hypophosphatemia and inadequate phosphate supplementation (50% of the dose of phosphate recommended, 2% of the dose used), whilst another patient showed no evidence of phosphorus depletion, despite apparently appropriate supplementation. These data suggest that inadequate phosphate supplementation may be responsible for the development of hypophosphatemia during treatment with aluminium hydroxide, and that re-evaluation of the patient's phosphorus status, at the time of rapid dose escalation (from two to six times the recommended daily dose) should be considered.
